Through two debate teams, RESOLVED explores the fascinating intricacies of high school debate which gives way to a portrait of the equally complex racial and class divide in American Education.

With competition as fierce as that of any sport, debate teams are a way for high school students to develop techniques of persuasion and reason. They're also, according to this searing documentary by Greg Whiteley, a hotbed of racial and class bias. Up-and-coming debaters from racially diverse schools challenge the traditional debate method by replacing the impartial, straightforward style with arguments born of personal experience.
